"Photography for me is not looking, it's feeling. If you can't feel what you're looking at, then you're never going to get others to feel anything when they look at your pictures."

The art of capturing nature in a seemingly unrealistic beauty is what we call landscape photography. There is so much charm in this world that has the potential to be enhanced through each click of your camera. However, the amount of time and patience that a photographer has invested in each photograph is likely not realized by most. Visiting different places, and looking at all the grandeur that our nature has to offer, entices us to capture the moment as it is; to be remembered and cherished forever. Here is an article by National Geographic for some rather helpful idea generation!

AYSA Aspirations

It has been a pleasure having Sejal on board with us as a college intern this fall. She will be missed and we wish her all the best in her future endeavors. Through this partnership, a door has been opened to welcome more interns down the road, as we continue to evolve. With gratitude, we look forward to the possibilities.

Celebrating the Diversity of Our Clients

Ōmisoka - 31st December 2020

Ōmisoka, a Japanese holiday, is all about preparing "to move forward in the right direction" for the coming year. This important festival is celebrated to make sure that there are no more loose ends at the end of the year and the following year can be a new beginning for everyone. Like in many other cultures, families get together to spend some much-needed quality time and to have a bowl of Toshikoshi udon or soba. It is tradition to eat long noodles on the last day of the current year to transition over to the next year. Many people visit temples at the end of the day to properly celebrate Ōmisoka.

We Would Love to Hear from You!

Have you enjoyed Sejal's newsletters? Feel free to send her a note before the end of the term.

Coming Up in a Future Issue

We were hoping to talk about tributes in this newsletter, however, by next time, there should be more to tell. In time for the holidays, a 2020 treat awaits!

This newsletter was prepared by Sejal Mittal from the Sport & Event Marketing program at George Brown College.
